APPELLATE CASE FILES OF THE SUPREME COURT
OF THE UNITED STATES, 1792-1831

In this microfilm publication are reproduced the appellate case files of the Supreme Court of the United States, 1792-1831. These records consist chiefly of transcripts of record of the cases in lower courts, comprising copies of the papers filed and of minute entries of the lower courts' actions in the cases. The transcripts of record beginning in 1832 have been printed and are in the Supreme Court Library.

The case files also include documents associated with the transcripts of record, such as petitions for writs of error or certiorari to lower courts, writs of error or certiorari, amendments or supplements to the transcripts of record, exhibits, citations to appellees to appear before the Supreme Court, appeal bonds, and assignments of error. In addition, there are documents resulting from the proceedings before the Supreme Court, such as agreements of counsel, depositions ordered by the Court to be taken as additional evidence, motions, orders, decrees, judgments, mandates, and correspondence. A few briefs are in these case files, but the official file of briefs beginning in 1854 is in the Supreme Court Library.

The Supreme Court of the United States, provided for in Article III, section 1, of the Constitution, was established by authority of the Judiciary Act of September 24, 1789 (1 Stat. 73). The jurisdiction of the Court extends to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime law; to controversies in which the United States is a party; and to controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizens of another State, between citizens of different States, between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State or its citizens and foreign states, citizens, or subjects. In cases affecting ambassadors, ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State is a party, the Supreme Court has original jurisdiction. Its appellate jurisdiction is defined in various statutes; but as the circuit courts of appeals are competent to give final decision in the majority of cases, the Supreme Court usually hears only those cases that involve the construction or the constitutionality of legislative enactments or other issues of general importance.

Membership of the Supreme Court, as specified by the establishing act, consisted of a Chief Justice and five Associate Justices. Congress made frequent changes in the number of Associate Justices until in 1869 it fixed the number at eight.

The date for convening the Court has changed frequently, and the terms are named for the months in which the Court convened. The 1789 act that established the Court provided for two terms annually, one to begin the first Monday in February and the other the first Monday in August. In February 1801 an act provided that the Court should meet on the first Monday in June and December of each year. In March 1802 this legislation was repealed and the days for convening were restored to those provided in the act of 1789. In April 1802 an act abolished the August term except for the receipt of motions and other routine business. Because of these changes there was no session of the Court after the one convened in December 1801 until February 1803. By an act effective in 1827 the annual term was set to begin on the second Monday in January, and in 1845 the day was changed to the first Monday in December. In 1873 the day was changed to the second Monday in October, and in 1916 to the first Monday in October, which remains as the day for beginning the annual term. The Supreme Court may also hold special terms when necessary for the dispatch of its business.

Until 1869, except for a brief interval in 1801-2, members of the Supreme Court served as regular members of the Federal circuit courts, of which the district judges were also members (1 Stat. 73; 2 Stat. 89, 132, 156). On April 10, 1869 (16 Stat. 44), Congress provided for the appointment of a circuit judge in each circuit who was to have all the powers of the circuit justice, as a member of the Supreme Court serving on circuit was known. The act also provided that each member of the Supreme Court should attend as least one term of the circuit court in each district during every 2-year period. The act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. 826), which established the circuit courts of appeals, provided that members of the Supreme Court were competent to sit as judges of the circuit courts of appeals within their respective circuits.

An alphabetical list of members of the Supreme Court, 1789-1831, which gives the dates of their service on the Court, appears after the information on related record groups in these introductory pages.

The appellate case files of the Court are of value for the study not only of constitutional and general legal history but of almost every aspect of American history. They relate to such matters as American colonial debts to British subjects, the ownership of land in the United States by British subjects, and the provisions of the treaty of peace of 1783 concerning these matters; the maintenance of American neutrality during foreign wars; the right of an American citizen to expatriate himself; the "quasi-war" with France during the John Adams administration; the embargo during the Jefferson administration; the power of the Supreme Court to determine the constitutionality of Federal and State laws; the legal effect of instructions by the President to his subordinates to perform acts not specifically authorized by Federal statutes; State laws impairing the obligation of contracts; corporation law; the doctrine of "implied powers" for the Federal Government; salvage, land claims; privateering and prize law; the question of the power of the Federal Government to punish criminals under the common law; bankruptcy; slavery and the slave trade; the extent of the admiralty jurisdiction of the Federal courts; and the power of the Federal Government to govern U. S. Territories and to regulate interstate and foreign commerce. The papers in the case files include documents bearing the signatures of such well-known figures as John Marshall (cases 29 and 80), Alexander Hamilton (cases 32 and 89), Albert Gallatin (case 186), Henry Clay (cases 231 and 605), and Daniel Webster (cases 1015, 1067, 1140, and 1612).

The titles used in this microcopy for the reported cases are identical to those used in United States Reports; titles have been devised in a similar style for the unreported cases. The titles in the Reports are not always the same as in records of the Supreme Court; some of the admiralty cases, for instance, have been designated in the Reports simply by name of ship. The inclusive dates given for the cases on each roll in this microcopy are the dates within which the cases were filed with the Court. A list of individual cases and the rolls on which they are reproduced is filmed on Roll 1.

Although the reports of cases in early volumes of the Reports are arranged roughly in the order in which the cases were decided, the case files reproduced in this microfilm publication are arranged in numerical order, the numbers usually having been assigned in the order in which the cases were filed. At the beginning of each case in the microcopy there is a citation to the volume and the page number of the report of the case. Within the case files the documents are not arranged in any uniform sequence.

The manuscript and revised printed opinions of the Court, 1808-1913, constitute a separate series among the records of the Court in the National Archives and are not filmed in this microcopy. Most of the opinions for the cases are published in United States Reports.

An index to the appellate case files, 1792-1909, was prepared by the Supreme Court and received in the National Archives with the case files. The index cards are arranged alphabetically by name of party in the case and they show case number, date of filing, and date of decision. The index, which contains about 59,000 cards, has been reproduced as Microcopy 408. It may be used to identify related cases.

The records reproduced in this microcopy and the index are part of a body of records in the National Archives designated as Record Group 267, Records of the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the same record group are other records of the Supreme Court that have been reproduced as microfilm publications. These include the minutes, from February 1, 1790 (Microcopy 215); the dockets, from August 4, 1791 (Microcopy 216); and the attorney rolls, from February 5, 1790 (Microcopy 217). Also in this record group are records of prize cases heard on appeal from Colonial and State courts by committees of the Continental Congress, 1776-80, and by the Court of Appeals in Cases of Capture, 1780-86 (Microcopy 162).

Additional records of the Court in the National Archives that are of interest in connection with the appellate case files are the original-jurisdiction case files, 1792-1910; the opinions of the Court, 1808-1913; and records of the Clerk of the Court, 1791-1911, including notes and briefs of Justice Henry Baldwin, correspondence, and unidentified case papers. An inventory of the records of the Court, prepared by the National Archives, has been published as Preliminary Inventory No. 139.

There are several other groups of records that relate to the activities of Federal courts. In Record Group 21, Records of the District Courts of the United States, are dockets, minutes, case files, and other records of some district courts and former circuit courts of the United States. These report the actions taken by the Supreme Court Justices on circuit. They relate to the same types of cases and in some instances to the identical cases that appear in the appellate case files of the Supreme Court. Record Group 60, General Records of the Department of Justice, and Record Group 206, Records of the Solicitor of the Treasury, contain correspondence, memoranda, reports, and other records relating to cases in which the United States was a party or had an interest. Record Group 118, Records of United States Attorneys and Marshals, contains a few records of United States attorneys and marshals that relate to Federal legal proceedings beginning in 1824.
